Seton Hall Law School offers an in-person or online Masters of Laws (LLM) degree in Health Law. The LLM degree provides attorneys with the opportunity to explore health law and policy or to focus more narrowly on courses designed for the lawyer planning to represent the health provider, payor, regulator, patient, and pharmaceutical companies. The LLM degree program, whether taken in-person, online or a combination of both, enhances the knowledge and skills possessed by practicing health care attorneys, as well as those seeking to expand their practice to health care clients.

Admission

A candidate seeking admission to the LLM program must have a J.D. degree from a law school that is approved by the Section of Legal Education of the American Bar Association or the foreign equivalent from a school of law. As Seton Hall Law School admits highly qualified candidates, the program is very competitive. The Admissions Committee considers practice experience, graduate degrees in the health field, quality of law school academic record, demonstrated interest in health, drug or biotechnology law, and evidenced ability to excel in academic pursuits. The application process is a rolling application process and applications for admission are accepted at any time.

Academic Standing

LLM students must remain in good academic standing throughout the program. View the full academic policy. (<https://law.shu.edu/academics/online/mls-llm-academic-policy.html>)

COURSE OF STUDY

LL.M. candidates must complete 24 credit hours of course work at the Law School or in eligible online courses. LL.M. students are expected to complete all course work within six years. LL.M. students may take courses in traditional health law and/or pharmaceutical and medical device law. Some students also integrate intellectual property courses as part of their health law studies. The health faculty and administration work closely with each student in selecting electives appropriate to the student's interests and career aspirations.
